During approximately four months of running battles, the images conveyed from the Dofos battlefield on the heights of Zanjibar bear witness to the violent warfare occurring between Ansar al-Shari'ah and three Army brigades plus a fourth from the Republican Guard and Counter-Terrorism force. The images also reveal the wide scale use by Ansar al-Shari'ah fighters of weapons acquired during ambushes conducted against mobile forces and assaults on army positions. Among this booty was a number of DC heavy artillery pieces, modern anti-aircraft weapons, a number of tanks and armoured transports in addition to large quantities of different kinds of ammunition. It appears that Ansar al-Shari'ah has completed the phase of attrition of the army and gained much war booty, according to statements made by one of the Ansar al-Shari'ah field commanders.

He added, "The coming period will be pulling the army into a war of attrition inside the city." This will strengthen the capabilities of the group which is trying to employ all of its forces in areas not exposed to aircraft fire, as opposed to what occurred during the clash in Dofus.

The field commander spoke of using mines and remote controlled explosives, as well as a special unit of snipers, and of preparing car bombs. He said that the battle would not be concentrated on Zanjibar alone but that it would be extended to other areas and will reach Aden.

Meanwhile, the state announced the death of 230 soldiers and officers during the past three months, while Ansar al-Shari'ah confirmed that the number of dead from the army and security forces was several times that number.
